Introduction of Speaker by Dr. Brian Jones

Speaker: Dr. Emerson "Tad" Baker

"An Archaeologist's View of Life in Seventeenth-Century Maine."

Drawing upon his excavations at many seventeenthcentury archaeology sites, Baker will explore the material world of the early settlers of New England. It is a story about encounters and exchanges between people from different cultures, living in uncertain times as well as the power of the place and its rich natural resources that sustained them, including furs, fish and lumber. Excavations have revealed the remains of their homes – from modest homes, to substantial longhouses and fortified complexes. Baker will focus in part on the Chadbourne Site (ca. 1643-1690) in South Berwick, Maine, where thirteen seasons of excavations revealed over 40,000 artifacts, including saw mill hardware, a range of tools, and many luxury items imported by the Chadbournes, the wealthy merchants who owned the property.

A question and answer period follows the presentation.
